Touring the Inaugural

by Jack Bass

At half a dozen Inaugural social functions for South Carolinians, one was struck by the sheer numbers of people. More than 500 overflowed a Senate Office Building hearing room and spilled into the adjacent corridors on Wednesday afternoon at a reception hosted by Fritz Hollings.

That evening, the crush of people was even greater at a downtown reception for Congressman and Mrs. John Jenrette, he looking sexy barechested under a thin formal shirt and his blonde wife Rita wearing a black eye patch to protect a scratched cornea (it's healing).

For two days it was one big floating cocktail party of South Carolina Democrats. There were faces that one expects to see at such functions. Pug Ravenel was there, still causing excitement where he went, and Brantley Harvey was there, and Dick Riley, and Bob McNair, and Alex Sanders, and Bryan Dorn, and many others. Get a huddle together of Democratic party insiders and the 1978 dream ticket comes out as Brantley for governor, Pug for the Senate against Strom, and Dick Riley for lieutenant governor.

And there were faces out of the past. Tom Chadwick, a former aide to the late Sen. Olin D. Johnston and a Washington civil servant since he headed Lyndon Johnson's 1964 campaign effort in South Carolina, marveled at the number of people who recognized him.

But there were scores of faces that belonged to people who never had been to an Inaugural or much of anything else that was "political," people who believed it when Jimmy Carter talked of a "People's Inaugural." From throughout the state, people came by train, plane, automobile. Two busloads came from places like Pacolet and Cowpens and Campobello.

Bill Aspy and his schoolteacher wife, a middle-aged couple from Greenville who attended a South Carolina Democratic Party $10-a-person reception at the Embassy Row Hotel, had never before been involved in politics. But last year they helped put up posters and held neighborhood meetings in their home to help Jimmy Carter. "We're Southern Baptists," explained Aspy, a chemical engineer with a synthetic fibers company, "and he seemed to us to be a real Christian and we decided to help."

At the Jenrette reception, held in an apartment building on Conneticut Avenue, two residents of the building who caught the attention of departing guests were Sen. and Mrs. George McGovern, who entered the front door and waited for the elevator. Several people greeted the McGoverns, and Patricia Rocks of Spartanburg, no doubt one of the very few wives of Spartanburg industrial executives who worked actively for McGovern in 1972, declared that the impromptu meeting was enough in itself to make the trip to the Inaugural worthwhile.

The POLITICAL ECONOMY by Ed Meadows

Impeach the Governor

What shall we call it? The Imperial Governorship? In his State of the State address, Governor James Edwards served notice that he isn't satisfied with the democratic - parliamentary system. Instead, he prefers raw dictatorship, with you - know - who as the dictator. Specifically, the governor asked the legislature to "return authority (over state agencies and commissions) to the people through their duly elected executive."

Such a statement takes one's breath away. Edwards is trying to claim here that only he, and not any of the state's duly elected legislators, is the true representative of "the people." One wonders if the good governor is auditioning for a seat on the Chilean junta with that sort of Newspeak. For instance, I doubt whether more than one or two of the legislators in the Statehouse, if that many, reflect the views I hold, but at least given the large number of legislators, the odds are good that my viewpoint will perhaps find some minimal representation on occasion. However, I'm damn sure the governor never represents those views. Yet Edwards would claim to be the only "true" representative of "the people."

And then Governor Edwards wants to take over the Department of Social Services, which is exactly equivalent to letting the fox guard the chicken coop. Rightwing types like the governor are avowed enemies of social programs, and their avowed aim, in fact their central goal, is toward the complete dismantling of these programs. For men of this persuasion see government social programs as the embodiment of "communistic liberal do-gooding" and their simpleminded schemata ignores that there happen to be poor, sick, elderly, disabled and troubled people in our society, people who need help and can only get it, however inadequate the help may be, from government services. It is in fact the purpose of government to provide services which the private sector fails to provide but which are necessary anyway.

But you see, the governor is angry and frustrated. He has been unable to liquidate the state government, as his simplistic ideological instincts tell him to do. He has been checked by the state legislature. He apparently has convinced himself that "the people" are counting on the governor to carry out some extreme rightist mandate. But to convince himself of this, the governor has obviously forgotten that he was elected merely by a fluke, merely by the weakness of Bryan Dorn, the Democratic opposition, in the wake of Supreme Court tactics to deny Pug Ravenel the governorship. There is no mandate.

And if Governor Edward' designs on the state power structure are outlandish, his designs on the state's economy and education system are just outrageous. One could find the following gems in his State of the State address:

On the Budget: The governor endorsed State Treasurer Grady Patterson's plan for a cash reserve fund to five percent of the state's income, to be drawn against when expenditures exceed revenues. In other words, he wants to leave five per cent of the state's income idle, thus cutting state expenditures by much more than five per cent, assuming the governor means state personal income. That is because state personal income is quite larger than state government expenditures. Really the two figures are not interdependent.

Such a surplus fund is entirely inappropriate except in times of economic boom. Even the most rabidly rightwing economist would disapprove of such a ridiculous, ignorant plan. No governmental body has any business whatever running a surplus in time of recession. It is this sort of idea, based on a complete misunderstanding of simple public finance economics, which fueled the depression of the 1930s.

Only slightly less absurd is the now - operational plan of the governor whereby the annual increase in the state budget is based on the growth (or decline) in state personal income. This is like basing how much one spends at the grocery store on the outcome of a given basketball game. The two figures represent seperate and independent money flows from different sources, going to different uses, and determined by unrelated objectives. It's a nonsensical plan to keep the state poor. Government expenditures are related to the welfare of the state's people. If there's any systematic relationship between such spending and state personal income, it ought to be an inverse one!

On Education: Governor Edwards spoke of his "high priority" for raising the state's level of education, which of course is nearly the lowest in the 50 states. As steps to improve education, the governor said he hopes to make sure that public school teachers salaries are increased till they match the Southeastern average. My God, is that the best we can do? No, and if the state's education system is to merely catch up with the rest of the nation, it must do better than simply matching the low Southeastern average (not that what Edwards proposed last week would accomplish even that modest goal).

Meanwhile, the governor tries to cut expenditures on higher education. Not surprising, for the state government in general is inhospitable to the higher learning and has continually sabotaged it. (A recent example of what the priorities really are: From Jan. 20 through 23, USC was shut down to save on fuel. Buildings were locked up and libraries were shut down, thus seriously inconveniencing scholars who had serious research to do — and much research goes on during the weekend when classrooms are quiet — but the state was not so strapped for fuel that it couldn't heat up the huge Carolina Coliseum on Saturday for a basketball game.)

And the governor, in his speech, pointed with pride to the "free enterpise economics" courses he has instituted in the state's public schools. This may seem a small matter, but it has deep implications. Any professional economist knows that this phrase "free enterprise economics" is merely a code word for a politically distorted, outmoded view of how the economic system operates. It should be titled "Rightwing Propaganda Indoctrination 101." Another outrage upon the people of South Carolina.

On Industrial Growth: Governor Edwards deliberately distorted the facts when he proclaimed that under his leadership the state's unemployment rate has fallen to "5.1 per cent." In the first place, this unemployment figure, presumably compiled by the state Employment Security Commission, is highly suspect. One cannot trust the competence of that agency, especially when there exist incentives to undervalue the level of unemployment. But in the second place, even if we accept the figure, a further check of the available data plainly shows that any lowered unemployment is not the result of increased employment in the state. According to the Commission's own figures, while unemployment in South Carolina fell 38 per cent from January, 1975 to October, 1976, at the same time employment rose only 6.3 per cent. That leaves almost 32 per cent of the decrease unaccounted for. In other words, the drop in unemployment represents those who have given up looking for work and who have moved elsewhere.

Further, Edwards took credit in his speech for the more than $1 billion which he claimed has been invested in the state since he took office. Yet it is readily apparent that the governor has aboslutely

Sexcapades?

South Carolina newspaper readers interested in the seamier side of life may get an eyeful soon if S. C. House of Representatives chief clerk Sylvia Risher follows through her threat to sue Rep. Norma Russell (R-Lexington) for defamation of character.

Risher told the press this week she has retained counsel and intends to sue Russell and the publishers of the State and the Greenville News for "uttering and publishing 'irresponsible and unwarranted attacks' that have 'harmed my personal and professional reputation.'"

The notice of intention to sue follows stories published last week by the two state dailies in which Rep. Russell charged that at least a third of the females employed at the state house had been involved in sexual escapades which "would make the Elizabeth Ray situation in Washington look like a kindergarten party." Although Ms. Russell mentioned no names — "You know who they are," she told reporters — she began her remarks by attacking a retroactive pay raise awarded to Ms. Risher by House Speaker Rex Carter of Greenville, and then later made the remark that "I haven't noticed any straight employes getting big raises." This combination of remarks apparently triggered Risher's charges that her name had been hurt of me personally, my children and my family."

On the day following her remarks, Rep. Russell told reporters that a number of straight, hard - working women at the State House had congratulated her for her stand. However, several women interviewed by reporters said Russell had been "very unfair." "I've never had anything to do with legislators," one said. Another told the State: "I'm afraid of that woman. If we were as bad as she said we were, we would take up money and have a hit man rub out that bionic mouth."

When Russell's remarks first appeared in the State, the story was considered so hot by the Associated Press State's sister paper, The Columbia Record, that both opted for a "hands-off" approach. "We wouldn't touch that story," one AP representative said.

Sexual fun and games — even orgies —are of course nothing new at the state-house. In his Sunday column last week, Greenville News capitol correspondent Tom Mason recounts the oft-told tale about how in the past legislators held orgies at the Wade Hampton Hotel with satyric regularity, draping a Confederate flag from a window facing the state house as a sign to legislators that the fund had begun and extra women were available.

Although Russell told reporters "no personality conflicts were involved" in her decision to go public with her accusations, insiders at the state house report a long - standing rivalry between Russell and Risher, the origins of which were somewhat murky. Russell has the reputation among some house members as a "loud mouth" whose humorless, erratic diatribes have become standard fare during her four - year tenure as a house member. Despite this animosity, however, a move to censure the Lexington Republican died quickly last week. As one state house insider told Osceola, "anybody who votes for a censure resolution will be voting to censure Norma from saying something they know is true. Besides, a sizeable portion of the male House members are less than anxious to go on record against legislative hanky - panky when they know there may be testimony under oath."

And that "testimony under oath", of course, is what has some representatives squirming in their legislative seats. When Russell was first told of the possibility of a suit, she said she would welcome it because "there will be individuals subpoena'd to testify under oath and it could get embarrassing — and not for me." The way things look at the moment, it may well get embarrassing for a lot of people. Risher intends to sue, Russell intends to subpoena, and there is little doubt around here that there are people with stories to tell. Trendwise publishers might well begin making discreet inquiries — anyone out there interested in ghosting the "Columbia Fringe Benefit?"

Rumors and Speculation

President McNair? — Rumors are circulating this week that former governor and Columbia attorney Bob McNair has filed an application for the post as President of the University of South Carolina. McNair is thought to have sufficient political clout to land the post and, according to a source close to the USC board of trustees, McNair is willing to accept the job on two conditions: first, that the salary level be raised to the $50,000 - $60,000 range; and secondly, that a trustee board chairman with whom McNair feels he can work be elected. Former state representative and current board member Othniel Wienges, who is presently vying for the chairmanship post, is thought to be that individual. McNair was out of town this week and unavailable for comment.

New Bottle Bill — we are told that a new bill banning no-deposit, no-return bottles will be introduced in the House next week. Chief sponsor of the bill will be Rep. Bill Campbell (D-Richland). The bill will receive support from the S. C. Environmental Coalition, the S. C. Wildlife Commission, the League of Women Voters, and the Governor's beautification committee.

Cryin' Time at Ma Bell's

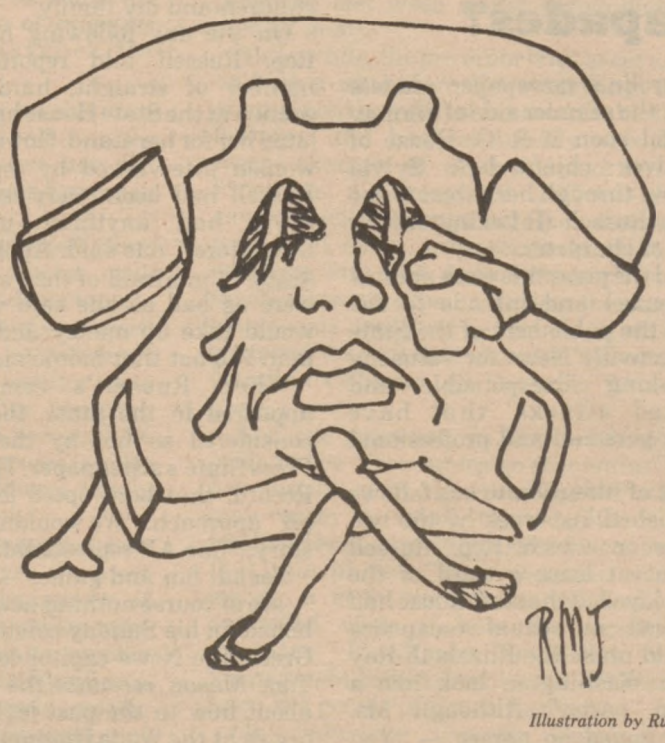

Illustration by Ruth Johnson

by Brad Stinson

Glory be and wash my mouth out with soap. I never would have believed it if I hadn't read it in the morning paper, but there it is in black and white: the South Carolina Public Service Commission has denied, absolutely, Southern Bell Telephone's requested 17 per cent increase. Now don't that beat all? And that's the first time since 1951 that Southern Bell in South Carolina has gotten that kind of pie in the face from the PSC. And don't they look good in everything they eat?

Why they was shocked! Shocked, I say. And why not? We was shocked too. Here we was all prepared for the regular PSC rubber stamp on a utility increase, you know, a Jive 'em what they got under bond kind of thing and they turn around and say "no dice" to the whole idea of an increase. Now that's something. What you think's gotten into them boys at the PSC?

One of the things that may have gotten to them boys is the heat in the kitchen. By that I mean the intensity with which public pressure has been brought to bear over the last few years regarding the PSC. Persons close to the situation told Osceola after the decision on Monday they felt public pressure had become so strong there was no other road for the PSC to travel than to turn down a rate hike. Southern Bell just happened to be in the wrong place at the wrong time.

Of course, Southern Bell made it easy, according to one insider. "The case was right for it. Debts were down, dividends were up and the parent company, AT&T, had made record billion dollar profits in their last two quarters. That and the fact that Bell did a sloppy job with the case. They did a much less substantial job than some of the electric utility rate hike cases" conducted substantial job than some of the electric utility rate hike cases" conducted by South Carolina Electric and Gas and Duke Power Company.

District Eight Senator Tom Turnipseed, a thorn in the side of the PSC over the last few years, predicted last week that the PSC would "reject much of Southern Bell's rate increase request because of people pressure." Turnipseed told Osceola that a PSC commissioner told his brother David (David Turnipseed, Senator from District 4), "we got some information you gonna like," referring to the fact that the commission would turn down Bell altogether.

"They understand that the people are not going to put up with it any more," Turnipseed said. "How can a company that's pouring out billions of dollars in profits in quarters, not in years, expect to get that kind of money from a state that's so poor anyway?" Bell's 17 percent increase translated into about 34 million in dollars. "I'm encouraged by it," Turnipseed continued. "Peope are starting to understand this is not the free enterprise system they have been taught about, that there is no competition, but that there is a lot of fix involved. That there is money going out of a poor state, from poor people to rich people, the wealthiest people."

To hear PSC chairman Guy Butler tell it, though, you wouldn't think public pressure had anything to do with the turn down. "I based my vote strictly on the facts I heard in the case after examining all the exhibits and all the testimony. This commission has been under pressure for many years and my opinion is there is not near as much pressure from the public now as there was two years ago when I was running for re-election. Naturally we listen to the public, but we listen to their (the company's) witnesses and we have our own witnesses."

Commissioner Butler may have felt the heat more when he was running for re-election, no doubt, but public outcry against the PSC has been steadily increasing over the last two years. The public has seen large increases, portions of which are always placed under bond and put into effect long before the PSC actually approves increases, parade over and over again before what appeared to be the rubber stamp commission.

There were other factors involved too. One of the big things has been the added pressure on the PSC coming from the South Carolina Legislature. Several newly elected legislators like the Turnipseed brothers ran on platforms that included the cleaning up of the situation at the PSC. There is little doubt in anyone's mind — at least those close to the situation — that part of what played into the decision was that several members of the legislature are hot on the commission's trail and these politically minded beings sitting on the commission are well aware of it.

Turnipseed has introduced several bills including one which would require the commissioners to be elected by the people rather than by their cronies over at the General Assembly. (Note the fact that recently decreased commissioner Abney Smith is about to be replaced by the Legislature with House Ways and Means Chairman Julian Leamond.) Turnipseed called the commissioners — "lame ducks." "They understand that the people are not going to put up with it anymore. They know they can't get elected in single member districts."

Senator Isadore Lourie from Richland County has introduced a bill that would create a division of consumer advocacy within the Department of Consumer Affairs and has called for a consumer advocate within the department to represent the public before regulatory agencies. Heretofore, that service has been carried out by a representative of the Attorney General's office, whose past record in rate hike cases hasn't been anything to cheer about. "The Attorney General has recently stated that he felt it would not be to the best interest of the public for his office to be required to serve in the dual capacity of representing the public and the Public Service Commission," Lourie said. Quite an admission by "the General" as he is known around his own office. Apparently he is feeling the heat too.

Another bill introduced in the South Carolina House by Florence Representative Ralph Anderson would create a 46-member utility consumer council. The council, which would be funded by an annual six-dollar fee from interested consumers, would have the authority to intervene in Public Service Commission hearings and court proceedings involving utility rates. Anderson said that "the public is upset about utility prices and the Public Service Commission. They have shown a lack of confidence in the PSC" to act in the public's best interest. It looks like consumer bills are crawling out of the woodwork all over the statehouse. Somebody must have turned up the legislative hearing aid.

has also called for the establishment of an Office of Public Advocate. And a study by the Legislative Audit Council (the South Carolina Legislature's investigative arm), which is to be released in the next few weeks, also comes down hard on the PSC. According to sources close to the State House, the study points out that the PSC has inadequate staff and other resources to do the job they should be trying to do. On top of that, the study supposedly finds that the PSC is failing to use the resources it has sufficiently. Finally, there is also a study done by Common Cause circulating that compares the different state regulatory agencies and South Carolina's PSC scores low in almost every category. As long as the public is on an unequal footing with the utility companies in terms of resources, the influence exerted by the utilities will far outweigh what influence the public can muster.

Admit it or not, the commissioners were feeling the heat from all sides. In addition to the public and the legislature, Bell had a formidable opponent in the Midlands Welfare Rights Organization, represented by the Richland County Legal Aid Society and in pursuing Bell on its political contribution slush fund and other matters, the commission had to sit up and take note. They may tell you that they based their decision strictly on the facts, but only a fool would believe they ignored the other factors that were staring them in the face.

In its order the commission noted that "for several years we have asked the ratepayer to meet the costs imposed upon the utilities by rising inflation and a sluggish economy. We believe that, for the first time in several years, economic conditions warrant some relief. We now ask (Bell) to tightened its belt and utilize its own resourcefulness to continue to improve its financial posture." You could sure say that it is about time, but the story is not over yet. The commission has been asked by Bell to reconsider its decision and the commission is likely to rule on that in the very near future.

Harry Marsh, Bell's top executive in South Carolina, who was shocked by the decision (as he put it), has all but threatened the public in his response to the order of the PSC. "While on the surface," he said, "the decision may appear to have short term benefits for telephone users, in reality it will mean higher costs for them over the long haul." I don't know about you, but I'll take mine while I can get it. The average consumer will get back around twelve dollars from the company, or about 21 million dollars for all consumers from the amounts collected under bond since August of 1976. But if you are in a hurry, don't be. The customers will have to wait out what could be a lengthly appeals process, and even if they decide to drop this one there is nothing to stop them from coming back tomorrow with another rate hike request.

Some of the heat may well be off the commission for a while, but it may be too late for the PSC as it now stands. The needs of the public with regard to utility rates have been overlooked for far too long for the public to forget so easily. The legislature is too far down the PSC reform road to turn back completely. There are more rate hike cases pending, including one already under bond for South Carolina Electric and Gas. Tom Turnipseed has already demanded that the PSC hold hearings immediately on SCE&G's rate increase. He said "it is outrageous to allow SCE&G to bill the people for the entire amount of their requested increase before they have the increase justified by the Public Service Commission. I have received many complaints about the December bills and I hate to think what will happen when the people receive their January bills after all this cold weather. Its an unbelievable situation when our light bills are higher than our house payments."

So consumers will wait and see what the PSC does with future rate hike cases, what the General Assembly does with pending legislation, what new roads an ever inflating economy will lead them down. One rate case will not be enough. Many may not be. The time may have already come when people can no longer afford to pay for what has become a necessity in most people's lives. "It's like the time we had that rate hike hearing over there, I think it was Duke Power Company," Turnipseed said, about to relate a story. "I said ya'll keep on wasting money in real estate development and paying off 50 law firms around the state and 30 members of the legislature and advertising and all this wining and dining and hunting and fishing and having a good time at the ratepayers' expense — some of the poorest people in the United States — and the people are going to do you like they did on the roads. They looked at me and said 'what's that crazy son-of-a-bitch going to say now?' You know, once upon a time we had people who owned the roads. They weren't public and they would gouge people by raising the toll so high that people finally got tired of it. You know, people have got to get from one place to the other to conduct their business. They said this is an absolute necessity -- to travel. It's just like electricity has become - an absolute necessity to people - and if you keep on gouging like you been doing, the people are going to take you over just like the roads. The Co-ops are going to come to town."

Maybe that time has come.

South Carolinians at the Inaugural

Clockwise from top:
Strom and Nancy Thurmond with Chitlin' Strut King
Jack West
Robert McNair and Matthew Perry
Don Fowler and DSS Board member Lusy Thrower

The ubiquitous presence of Strom Thurmond was striking. At the cocktail party thrown by Hollings, Thurmond appeared, shook every hand in sight and invited all to attend his reception the next day.

"We'll keep you warm with hot coffee," one Thurmond aide quipped to an acquaintance, "with us, that's all we can do." It brought back memories of the reception given by Thurmond in Miami Beach in 1968, the night Richard Nixon won the Republican nomination and Thurmond played the role of kingmaker. In the ballroom of the hotel, an establishment somewhat below the level of grandeur that housed the South Carolina Republican delegation, the fare consisted of orange juice and tiny ham sandwiches and tiny cheese sandwiches. By discreetly discarding two slices of bread, a guest could make his or her own tiny ham and cheese sandwich and for $1.35 could go to the bar if so inclined and get a shot of vodka to convert the orange juice into a screwdriver.

Last week after the Inaugural, Strom and Nancy showed up at the official South Carolina Democratic Party reception at the Embassy Row Hotel and got as much attention as anyone there. The only other person to whom strangers came up to say hello and introduce themselves was Matthew Perry.

Although James Dickey moved about in higher cotton than that of the South Carolina functions, there was pride in the splash he made. Because of his well-known proclivities for being obstreperous, there was apprehension about how he would perform at the Inaugural Gala, but on television it was all class. One who was there said he was good in person, but from what he later heard, Dickey came across better on the tube.

Newsweek's Pete Axthelm, the superb sports editor and a talented writer with wide-ranging interests, spent a day tagging around town with Dickey. The only problem for the magazine's news desk in New York came when Axthelm quoted Dickey as calling him "Buddyro'," a term unfamiliar to Yankees, but they called one of their good southern stringers to make sure they understood what it meant and to get an idea about how to spell it. As ol' buddyro' Dickey himself proclaimed to the Washington Post, with characteristic modesty, "Where else in history can you find it — the President and the poet, two Jimbos from Georgia."

The Inaugural itself and its accompanying deep symbolism provided special meaning for southerners, reunited in a sense of oneness with their country that hasn't existed for well over 100 years. There was the choir of black faces and rich voices from Atlanta University that sang the "Battle Humn of the Republic," the song Yankee soldiers sang at their campfires, and the band from Virginia that played Dixie, and the Jewish cantor from Atlanta who sang the national anthem. And the Georgia accent as the new President repeated the oath of office in a sub-freezing breeze under a bright sun a 12:04 p.m. and 16 minutes later completed a restrained Inaugural address that called for renewal and expansion of the American dream and warned of the limits of power.

And when his presidency is over, he said, he hoped that people might say about the nation "that we had torn down the barriers that separated those of different race and region and religion, and where there had been mistrust, built unity, with a respect for diversity."

When it was over, I turned and asked a young woman from Georgia who sat behind me how she felt. "Proud," she said, "just proud."

Don Fowler, the South Carolina Democratic state chairman, who wasn't an early Carter supporter, passed by. "I really found it moving," he said quietly.

The applause that had been given Gerald Ford, the walk to the White House by Jimmy and Rosalynn to the delight of the crowd, and the realization that the United States seemed to be entering its third century with a new maturity sent one groping for an evaluation.

It came that night. At the Embassy Row Hotel reception before the inaugural balls, Oscar Butler, a political activist and black college educator from Orangeburg who like Don Fowler was not among Jimmy Carter's supporters a year ago, articulated the sense of pride and good feeling displayed by scores of other South Carolinians.

"I was talking to a white gas station attendant this afternoon," Butler said, "and he and I agreed that we both felt a sense of hope and unity for the country — and he represents those with whom my people have been most at odds. I'm glad I came. I feel good."

Jack Bass is co-author of the recent book, "The Transformation of Southern Politics" and the former Columbia bureau chief of The Charlotte Observer.

trb from Washington

Plastic bag Inaugural

Everything at an Inaugural is larger-than-life: the parade, the oratory, the crowd, the presidential office itself. Everything but the man.

Jimmy Carter is installed now. Can he govern? Some auguries are good. The national mood is hopeful; we aren't at war; the Republican recession (worst since the Republican depression of the '30s) is getting better. The American public watches eagerly, curious, apprehensive. It is willing to believe - no, strike that - it is yearning to believe. Jimmy Carter wakened great expectations that he can't fullfill immediately, if at all. Like Kennedy 16 years ago he won by the narrowest majority and, like Kennedy, he is conscious of it. As he starts his you-all, not-just-yet administration, we may expect any day now a magazine article beginning, "He does, too, have a sense of humor." We shall all know who is meant.

Unfamiliarity with the Washington scene is evident everywhere. The Griffin Bell nomination for the Justice Department, the Ted Sorensen choice for the CIA, may or may not have been justified, but anyone here could have known they were predestined to cause explosions; the Carter team did not know this or may have expected a row but not one as big as they got.

These reflections came to us crouched over a pine table in the Inaugural press section trying to keep warm. Each Inaugural has a "first," you know — the first automobile, the first loudspeaker, the first TV broadcast — that kind of thing. For us 1977 was the first plastic garbage bag Inaugural. The Red Cross suggested it. Sixteen years ago we sat shivering to Kennedy's "Ask not" speech with feet buried in a snow drift feeling sorry for George Washington at Valley Forge. This time we snuggled into our comfortable garbage bag with all the body heat trapped in from toes to waist.

One thing Carter has done, he has brought in a new economic team. The story of Jerry Ford could be entitled, "How to manage the economy so as to lose an election." He could hardly have managed to hurt himself more. He and his conservative advisers agreed: keep hands off; veto job and spending bills to prevent inflation, and then private enterprise, not government, will come riding on its white horse to the rescue. A recession as steep as this, it was generally believed, would bring a correspondingly quick recovery. Instead of that it came slowly. Then there was the Mystery of the Ten Billion Dollars. Somehow or other, that amount of money in projected budget expenditures never was spent. The story of the "shortfall" is still unraveled. (It seems to have been in Defense appropriations and will come out in driblets from now on.) At a time when the economy needed a shove it wasn't there. The recovery came to a pause just in the critical months of the 1976 campaign; just when the six billion dollar jobs bill that Ford vetoed last spring might otherwise have been taking effect. Alice Rivlin, director of the Congressional Budget Office, reckoned that the shortfall lowered the rate of growth in Gross National Product by one percent.

The White House team had a fixation on inflation although, as Walter Heller told the Senate last week, the modest fiscal stimulus program "won't come within a country mile of generating excess-demand inflation."

The country is safer, I think, for having the Ford team replaced. James Reston described ex-Treasury Secretary William Simon as an "economic theologian." A rapt look came into his eyes as he expounded his creed. He called the food-stamp program a "a well-known haven for chiselers and rip-off artists." He assured the President that New York City's default would be "tolerable and temporary." On the day Mr. Ford issued his farewell economic message last week, Simon had a letter in The Wall Street Journal, reproaching that radical organ for dangerous thoughts on funding Social Security.

So far as known Mr. Ford never deviated from his team's way of thinking. His economic message gives the philosophy final expression. He gently chides Americans for "a tendency, born of goodwill and a desire to improve the state of American life, which makes us think we can create costless benefits for our people." That's why he cast vetoes. "Nowhere," he continues, "are those benefits tradeoffs so evident as in our Social Security program and in our efforts to provide medical insurance for our people." He seems to be saying that we can't afford health insurance; we can't revise Social Security funding, which is the most regressive of all our taxes. Other nations can; we can't. Moderate-liberal Charles Schultze replaces Ayn Rand-fundamentalist Alan Greenspan as chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers. Other names go up on Washington's doors of power. One odd one, incidentally, is Zbigniew Brzezinski, national security adviser; nobody has caused more tumult in composing rooms since Czolgosz shot McKinley.

As Mr. Carter takes office the three kingpin industrial countries are standing like small boys on a raft - each urging the others to jump in. The pond is the world economic crisis. Each country wants the others to go first, to stimulate, to reflate, to risk more inflation. The recovery in the US still is tentative; most other countries are in bad shape; the developing countries are in desperate shape. The gap between rich and poor is getting bigger.

If you think this is exaggerated, note that Jimmy Carter (who was acting President three or four weeks before taking oath) dispatched Richard Cooper, his Undersecretary of State for Economic Affairs, to Tokyo; it's one reason for sending Fritz Mondale to Europe and Japan, it's one reason we can expect the President himself to attend an economic summit meeting in Europe, maybe in late May. Somebody has to coordinate signals. "There's substantial risk of a premature world recession," Brookings expert Lawrence Krause told Congress. The danger is high tariffs, devaluations, capital flow restrictions - all the dirty tricks nations can use to beggar their neighbors. It brought Hitler in the '30s. Big shot Reginald Jones of General Electric testified that the "world economy is in such precarious condition that (American) stagnation could lead the whole world into another recession."

How many things must Carter fix? Amnesty, Panama Canal, SALT talks, China, the Middle East. Now add another: the world economy.

Theatre

Portraying divorce

Six years ago Oliver Hailey attempted to cram all the frustrations and turmoil of not one but three divorced women and their ex-men into a single day of their lives, further compressed into a two-hour, two-act play. Was it possible? Well, Hailey got good marks for his script. However, we would imagine the thing has given producers and players outside of New York and the other theatre centers fanatic fits. By and large the Workshop Theatre people have done a very good job with their version, but we came away not fully satisfied.

The plot: Three neighboring divorced women in a Manhattan high-rise have gotten together on Father's Day; their children have gone to spend the day with their fathers. In the first act the women lounge around the patio, constantly venting their romantic bitterness on each other. In the second it's evening, the hubbies have returned for a semi-formal cocktail party, and the women gang up on each of them in turn, it seems. Based on the supposition that women suffer the most from divorces, the audience is to conclude that these three are, in many ways, sisters sharing a common fate, with the only means of survival being a joining of their strengths to overcome their weaknesses.

When the husbands appear in the second act they reveal, through various conversations among themselves and with the women, that they feel essentially the same as the women do. The audience, in the position of seeing both sides of the miscommunications, sees the irony in situations that could have been resolved -- and in at least one case still can be -- but never will be.

Beth Burnside as Louise dominates the first act with her obscenity and sarcasm. Her witticisms (at times fired off a little too rapidly to be credible) draw from the audience both laughter and the desire to run up and silence her. She is effective. The observer, even one as a rule sympathetic to the women in divorce cases, wonders how anyone could have been enticed to marry such a personality, and figures Tom carried out a neat stroke to get free from her.

Sheri Browne plays Marian as a woman who, despite her incredible snobbery, is concerned about the other women. She is naive but gutsy. Mrs. Browne's performance is both convincing and pleasing -- slightly overplayed and underplayed in spots, but generally commendable. Hers, too, is a difficult role.

In the first act, Debbie Trevathan as Estelle seems stiff and forces her moves and words, but she improves. She is at her best when describing "Pick-a-Parent," a game played by the children in the orphanage where she grew up, and narrating how once, for a short while, she actually became part of a family. It's possible that her apparent uncertainty as an actress really was a cultured aspect of her role. We give her the benefit of the doubt, but must point out that the exact nature of Estelle still is not as clear to us as the other roles are.

Estelle's ex-husband, Harold, should be the most disliked, being the only husband to leave his wife for another woman. This is overlooked by a viewer won over by his boyish looks and contagious enthusiasm at the prospect of marrying a girl from a large, wealthy family. He is the most spirited of the three male characters.

Tom, portrayed by Roger Cobb, is a weary man, unsure what went wrong in his first marriage but at least satisfied with his second. Cobb handles the role convincingly. It is Tom who makes his ex-wife Louise see that, like it or not, women are the principle losers in divorce.

Stuart Browne as Marian's ex-husband, Richard, is a bit too airy and nonchalant for the audience to accept him as real. It would do nicely in a comedy, but "Father's Day," though humorous on occasion, is essentially tragic.

The Workshop performers led us to Hailey's concluding thesis, but they couldn't fill in all the spaces along the way. Consequently, we simply can't be quite so sure of the thesis' validity.

no right to take credit for any such investment. The $1 billion figure is meaningless, unless we know how much of it was invested in direct response to any industry - seeking efforts of the governor. Odds are that none of it was.

On Parks and Recreation: South Carolina has the smallest number of parks and recreational facilities in the nation, but Governor Edwards wishes to make sure that no more parks are created by government purchases or other acquisition arrangements. It is clear to the most casual observer that the governor is speaking to the narrow interests of the statess landowners and developers, who are no doubt anxious to remove any spectre of pesky environmentalists seeking to preserve environmentally or historically important land areas from the ravages of condo builders and housing salesmen. Note here that Governor Edwards himself, in blatant conflict of interest, owns investments in coastal lands near Charleston which ought to be subject to closer environmental scrutiny.

One found it very amusing to hear the ETV commentators, moments after the speech was concluded, weeping and wailing over the failure of the state legislators in attendence to applaud very much. These shinging gems of broadcast journalism attributed the scanty applause to the fact that the legislators were too busy reading their copies of the speech to applaud. It never occurred to the ETV "reporters" that the lack of applause might have been a response, and a proper one, to the content of the speech. Nor did these paragons of wisdom realize that shortly before the speech the governor had been through a row with the legislature and the DSS board over his wish to take over the DSS.

Well, applause was most inappropriate. To the contrary, the governor has shown himself to be almost pathologically irresponsible and incompetent. Having no conception that he is governor of all "the people," he greedily wishes to pervert the state government to his narrow and ill-begotten ends.

One can be thankful that the legislature, imperfect as it most surely is, has held the governor's worst instincts in check so far. One can also be thankful that the governor has only 23 months to go. But how much damage can he do in those remaining months? How much can he enact of the nightmarish, illogical, insensitive, improper plans contained in the State of the State address?

After due consideration of the governor's plans and propositions, one begins to think seriously of nothing less than impeachment as the only correct response.

"Jail Bait" and "Highway Hookers" on next door. All four start at 11 a.m. with the last complete shows at 9.

CAROLINA THEATRE, 1223 Main Street, 252-8011
"Emma May." All we know are the times. which are 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9.

COLUMBIA EAST I THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350
"Silver Streak." An unusual comedy-adventure set aboard a posh passenger train traveling from L. A. to Chicago. What makes it unusual is the gentle, spacey performance by Gene Wilder -- not your typical action hero -- in the lead and the Colin Higgins script, which is loaded with eccentric characters and a sweet, romantic feeling. A fun movie. Richard Pryor, Jill Clayburgh, Ned Beatty. PG. 2, 4, 6, 8, and 10.
COLUMBIA EAST II THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350
We don't want to suggest that post-holiday stagnation has begun to set in, but "Midway" is back— without Sensurround. It's got Henry Fonda, James Mitchum, and other old-time Hollywood stars in an old-time tale about a battle that changed history, etc. G. Call for the feature times.
DUTCH SQUARE NORTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110
"The Enforcer." Dirty Harry (Clint Call for the times.
Eastwood) has a big gun, but it's strictly business as he and a new woman partner (Tyne Daley) hunt down a terrorist group that apt to blow up San Francisco. In this day of mindless urban violence you may find yourself rooting for Harry against the unrelievedly evil criminals, but the mentality behind the killings and mayhem is strictly Sieg Heil and it's a terrible movie. With Bradford Dillman. R. 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9.
DUTCH SQUARE SOUTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110
"The Shaggy D.A." Disney's Christmas feature is yet another of the "Shaggy" movies: this one with Dean Jones and Tim Conway as a dog detective. G. 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9.
FOX THEATRE, 1607 Main Street, 254-5212
"The Seven-Per-Cent Solution." Daffy Sherlock Holmes (Nicol Williamson) shoots up with cocaine, and even after Watson (Robert Duvall), gets him the cure from Vienna's Sigmund Freud (Alan Arkin), he's but a shadow of his former sleuthing self. Author and screenwriter Nicholas Meyer obviously should have read E. L. Doctorow's "Ragtime" before he penned this updating of the Holmes legend, because he's incompetent with fictional and real life myths alike. Williamson's Holmes is a manic bore who is neither very funny nor startlingly logical in his deductions, while Arkin's Freud, a "detective of the mind," goes around spouting little nuggets of pseudoscience like a nineties version of Joyce Brothers. The movie desperately needs some genuine wit, and it's amazing that neither Williamson, Arkin, nor Laurence Oliver as Moriarity were able to supply it (Joel Grey does briefly). With Vanessa Redgrave, Georgia Brown. PG. 1, 3:05, 5:10, 7:15, and 9:20.
GAMECOCK I THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022
"Sasquatch." Budget adventure pic about the bigfoot legend moves out to Cayce. G. Call.
GAMECOCK II THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022
"One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest." If you haven't seen it and have seen everything else in town, this triple academy award winner on its upteenth run may be the best bet of the week. With Jack Nicholson, Louise Fletcher. R. Call for feature times.
JEFFERSON SQUARE THEATRE, Jefferson Sqaure Downtown, 254-6731
"A Star is Born." Now that Streisand is out to turn herself into a show-biz institution -- a kind of 70s Ethel Merman -- it's getting that a little Barbra goes a long way. There's far too much of her in this teary tale about a young singer whose career is started by her rock superstar lover (Kris Kristofferson) on the alcoholic downswing. Good direction and writing by Frank Pierson and an unusually good performance by Kristofferson, but producer Streisand's self-indulgence weighs the movie down. R. Call for the shows.
MIRACLE THEATRE, 1229 Main Street, 256-1950
"The Way We Were" in a double bill with "Shampoo." The former is a good commercial entertainment about an ugly duckling (Barbra Streisand) who falls hard for a Fitzgeraldian golden boy (Robert Redford) with America of the thirties through the fifties — somewhat less convincing — as the background. The latter, about a Don Juan hairdresser in the late sixties, is more than just a commercial entertainment — what with the thoughtful Robert Towne script and the good performances by Warren Beatty, Goldie Hawn, and Julie Christie. "The Way We Were plays at 1:25, 5:45, PLAZA III THEATRE, 1223 Main Street, 254-7960
"Frankenstein." The Warhol version returns. Expect lots of gruesome sex and a low - camp tone. X. Call about show times.
PALMETTO THEATRE, 1417 Main Street, 254-5800
"King Kong." Kong lovers may be outraged by this semi-cynical remake, but the DeLaurentiis-John Guillerman version is a good spectacle, short on scares, yet in some ways more interesting than the '33 "Kong" and certainly more realistic. Non-actress Jessica Lang is the ape's paramour, with Jeff Bridges and Charles Grodin this time in the male roles. PG. 2, 4:30, 7, and 9:30.
RICHLAND MALL I THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228
"The Pink Panther Strikes Again." Not as funny as the previous Panther films, but still a pleasantly innocuous bit of entertainment. This time Clouseau (Peter Sellers) has his final showdown with the now mad Herbert Lom. PG. 1:30, 3:30, 7, 7:30, and 9 with the matinees dropping during the week.
RICHLAND MALL II THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228
"Mysteries of the Gods." Yet another exploitation flick based on the Erich Von Daniken speculations about "ancient astronauts." G. 3, 5, 7, and 9 with an additional 1 o'clock show on Saturday and no matinees during the week. The late show here at 11:15 on the 28th and 29th will be "The Paper Chase."

women's music. Her absorption in women's spirituality and her intent to develop a genre of music that is distinctly female in musical as well as lyrical content is clearly evident in her album "Mooncircles."

Last week we announced that WUSC, the University of South Carolina radio station would be changing formats to a progressive rock emphasis: this week there will be yet another change in the Columbia radio scene. As of Monday, the 31st, WSCQ-FM in West Columbia will be switching over to a music and talk format from their current news and middle of the road music. This move came about when three announcers from WIS-AM bought stock in the flagging WSCQ and said that they would be bringing their popular AM programs to the FM band. Thus, Gene McKay will now be on the air from 6 a.m. to 10 a.m. on WSCQ, Bill Benton will shepherd an alternating talk and music format from 10 until 4, Dave Wright plays news and music until 7 p.m., and "easy listening" music will then be broadcast until midnight. WSCQ is on the FM frequency of 100 mz.
